Notes for WILLIAM JESSE SPARKMAN, SR.:

William Jesse (known as Jesse) Sparkman was quite prominent in early Bertie Co. History. He served on many juries' along with his brother Edward and his father, Captain William. He also must have been rather wealthy as he owned quite a bit of land within the boundaries of the Co. of Bertie. In 1774 he was ordered to have a license for one of his "negro boys" named Andrew to carry a gun and hunt upon his land on his giving security to the court according to the law.

Jesse disappears from the records of the Co. about 1774, about six years before his death. The Revolutionary War was in full swing during this time, and Jesses' absence from his usual court house activities probably indicates that he was away from his home/Co.. War records for this time are missing on several thousands of military personnel because of the burning by the British when they took Washington during the war of 1812. Writing materials were scarce and the men were really too busy fighting for the cause to take time to record events of a specific soldier's accomplishments. Written records of Garrison units are more readily available than other military records of any kind, during this time period. Some information on specific Revolutionary War soldiers begins to appear when the Revolutionary War pensions began in 1818. If a man was fortunate to survive until 1818, and had served during the Revolution, he was entitled to a pension from the U. S. Government. Of course the individual had to prove that he had served, by actual witnesses that knew him or other such evidence.
