Notes for Paul Edward Howell:

The town got its name from the White Bluff Iron Forge located on Turnbull Creek. Built by Richard C. Napier as a part of his Piney Furnace, it closed in the 1850s. The Iron Forge workers apparently settled on the highland and worked at the Forge located alongside Turnbull Creek.

Following the end of the War Between the States, the resulting railroad provided a nucleus for White Bluff, which was platted in 1867 by A. Myatt and incorporated in 1869. The town was located on the Nashville & Northwestern Railroad. Alexander Carr built the first home in the newly platted town soon after the last Union soldiers moved out after the War. The first store was built in 1865 by Morton and Wright.

Perhaps White Bluff's most influential early citizen was Colonel William James. Although he was born on the Court Square in Charlotte on October 2, 1849, he died in White Bluff on February 20, 1933 at age 83. Educated at Tracy Academy in the Charlotte, he was graduated from the US Military Academy at West Point in the 1870s and served in the Indian Wars, the Philippines and the Spanish-American War. James retired to the White Bluff area in the early 1900s and acquired much land and many business interests. He donated the land for a high school to be built in White Bluff. Their athletic teams are nicknamed "The Colonels". William James is buried in the lobby of the school which bears his name.

Several private schools were operated in White Bluff. The first public school was destroyed by fire in 1879. When Jeannie Woodworth arrived in 1905, she was appalled at the rate of illiteracy found in the community and persuaded Colonel William James to build a school in 1910 to be operated by the Episcopal Church. The school was named Elizabeth House in honor of Colonel James's mother. Elizabeth House served the community until the mid-1900s.

My father Paul E. Howell said he read all the books in the Elizabeth House Library when he was growing up in White Bluff. He was confirmed in the Episcopal Church which ran a mission at the Elizabeth House.
